

ACCESS Australia: Autistic Community Experiences of Services and Supports in Australia

We are conducting a national survey to understand the accessibility barriers Autistic people experience in everyday Australian settings.

The survey focuses on key areas of daily life like healthcare, employment, transport, retail, education/training, and community or leisure activities.

Who can take part?

You're invited to take part if you:

- live in Australia
- are 18 years or older
- identify as Autistic (formal diagnosis or self-identified) OR are a parent/caregiver of an Autistic person (of any age).

We want to learn:

- whether you or your child experienced any difficulties or barriers
- the types of barriers you encountered
- how these experiences affected day-to-day life and wellbeing.

Your participation can help build a clearer national picture of accessibility barriers and supports for Autistic people and families

What's involved?

- A 10–30 minute anonymous online survey.
- You can skip any question and complete it in your own time.
- No personal identifying information is collected.

This research is led by Aspect (Autism Spectrum Australia), with collaborators at Griffith University, University of Western Australia and The Kids Research Institute.

Please be mindful of confidentiality when commenting or sharing. This project has been reviewed by the Griffith University Human Research Ethics Committee (Ref: 2025/950).
